

Wed. 7 p.m.
April 16
Argyros Forum 208

The Future of Journalism

in the Digital Age

PANELISTS

1 Gregory Cowles
Columnist and Staff Editor,
New York Times Book Review

2 Rob Curley
Editor, Orange County Register

3 Bill Davis
Founding President,
Southern California Public Radio

4 Dan Froomkin
Senior Writer,
The Intercept and First Look Media,
the nation's first independent digital media publication

5 Davan Maharaj
Editor, the Los Angeles Times

6 Rem Rieder
Senior Editor for Features and Media Coverage,
USA TODAY

7 Martin J. Smith
Editor-In-Chief,
Orange Coast Magazine

The digital revolution is reshaping American society as drastically as the industrial revolution did more than a century ago, destroying established practices and offering fresh possibilities. Six nationally known authors, editors and journalists will explore how journalism and its practitioners can exploit technology's potential while preserving and advancing democratic values in an April 16 symposium at Chapman University. Free and open to the public, the symposium will feature a robust panel discussion and invite audience participation. Martin J. Smith, Editor-In-Chief of Orange Coast Magazine, will moderate the discussion.

CHAPMAN UNIVERSITY

Wilkinson College of Humanities & Social Sciences
Department of English